【Q 1】

In 2020 and 2021, many of our activities were restricted due to the spread of COVID-19. Write about one thing that you wanted to do but were unable to because of the pandemic. Explain why you wanted to do it.

【Q 2】

Read the following two speakers' opinions about censorship* on the internet. State which speaker you agree with and explain why.

*censorship: the practice of officially examining books, movies, etc., and removing parts considered unacceptable for moral, religious, or political reasons

Ken:

Censorship on the internet is an important issue these days. Despite some negative effects, I believe that freedom of speech online is essential in a democratic society.

It is true that anonymous comments on social media might cause emotional harm to people and in extreme cases lead to suicide. However, the censoring of comments and opinions on social media could lead to far worse consequences. It means that a government or private organization has to decide which comments and opinions are acceptable or not. It is not always easy to separate valid criticism from abuse. People's right to comment on the actions of powerful people may be restricted.

The regulation of news networks and search engines is even more dangerous. Most people these days get their information about world events from the internet. If access to news networks and search engines is restricted, citizens may not learn the truth about their government's actions.

So, any form of censorship of the internet is a step away from an open and democratic society. The internet should therefore be free of censorship.

Aya:

I think that some form of internet censorship is justified for the following reasons.

First, total freedom of speech does not exist in any society. There are limits to what people can say in even the most democratic countries. If you didn't have laws against racist hate speech or threats, citizens would not be able to live secure lives. Why should the internet be different? Some censorship of social media posts or sites that encourage such things as terrorist acts is indispensable.

Second, elections in democratic countries including the USA are often being influenced by fake news stories generated online to spread misinformation and to influence the way people vote. Surely, it is necessary to censor such sites to protect the democratic process from propaganda and lies.

Of course, to have as little censorship as possible of the internet should be the goal. However, if the internet were totally free of regulation, the security and stability of society would be seriously threatened.

2022 年度 帰国生入試（英語）【Q 1】 解答用紙

I wanted to take lessons with all of my classmates again. For a while, only half of us went to school each day while everyone else studied at home. I found it hard because most of my friends were at home when I was at school. I had almost nobody in my class to talk to, and outside school I had to study for entrance exams. It was very stressful for me as I hardly had any time to enjoy myself, and I ended up arguing with my parents a lot. I wanted to go back to having normal lessons so I could spend time with my friends again and feel less stressed. (113 words)

2022 年度 帰国生入試（英語）【Q 2】 解答用紙

I agree with Aya that internet censorship should be allowed. These days, people can post whatever they want online without even giving their name, so they often feel like they don't have to take responsibility for what they say. This makes it easy for them to post things without caring about the effect on others. For example, some professional sports players have recently received abuse online from angry fans. This can be very hurtful for people who experience it and can even affect their mental health. Without rules, this kind of problem will surely continue. Therefore, to protect people from abuse, I believe there should be some control over what can be said online. (114 words)
